

CHANGED THE COAST LINES.

Queer Results of the Gulf Storm Have Been Discovered.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 20.—An expedition sent out to examine the isolated islands of the Louisiana and Mississippi coast to find how they were affected by the storm and whether any assistance was needed by those who are settled upon them has returned to New Orleans and reports that while there was no loss of life there were a number of important changes in the littoral topography caused by the storm, especially in the strings of islands which protect the Mississippi coast. In all cases the channels between the islands were deepened by the tidal wave, this being specially noted in the case of the gulf port channel. The Government had been engaged for a long time in trying to dredge out this channel. The hurricane did in one day, leaving a twenty-three-foot channel to the railroad wharf.

On the other hand, the islands have mostly all suffered, being badly washed and many of them greatly reduced in size. Island No. 10, off Mobile, which has been gradually disappearing for years, suffered another big reduction through the heavy wash of the waves from the southwest, and the lighthouse is threatened with collapse through the washing away of some of its foundations. Grant's Pass was badly washed and nearly half of it has disappeared. The east end of Horn Island was washed away. Round or Turtle Island, which was badly washed, and the lighthouse keeper was compelled to leave his post and was injured in the process. The islands were completely under water during all the storm and were badly washed. The lighthouses were pounded by the waves, which were easily over it, but no great injury was done.

At Pensacola, Miss., during the height of the storm, a man registered as L. L. Andrews, of Meridian, was washed away, and, purchasing a pistol, blew out his brains. He was Louis Livendulas, a cotton buyer of New Orleans, and well to do. No explanation given of the suicide except excitement over the storm.
